Tips for collaborative teaching

- Scenario: You are a resident working with a group of medical students on their first day of a new rotation. They have each identified a learning goal and have approached you to do some teaching. What are some tools you can use to effectively teach in a collaboration and positive way
- Perspectives from the literature:
 - Create a safe environment by getting to know your learner and encourage critical thinking through reflection and setting specific goals
 - Provide timely feedback and conclude with a jointly determined goal and strategy to achieve it
 - Enhance learning retention by understanding student's prior knowledge, promoting connection with their clinical experiences, and advocating for teaching one another
 - As educators, recognize signs of burnout in students such as emotional exhaustion or cynicism and encourage prioritization of their mental and physical health
